Photo Courtesy: @Microsoft365/Twitter When you've got stacks of data to organize, you need a spreadsheet that is up to the challenge. As part of the Microsoft Office suite, Excel is one of the most popular options — and for good reason. Microsoft packs a lot of computing power into its Office products, but all that power won't do you any good if you don't know how to use it. Before you stress about learning a whole new program, remember that Excel wouldn't be hugely popular and individuals, including students, if it was difficult to learn. Besides guidance and tutorials that are available straight from Microsoft, the internet offers a lot of free guidance to help you learn how to use Excel and other Office programs. Let's take a look at a few good options to get you started.Look for Step-by-Step YouTube VideosThere's no doubt about it — YouTube is a powerhouse when it comes to finding tutorials for almost anything, and that includes mastering Excel. The best perk of learning something new on YouTube is you can visually see the steps and follow along without relying on written instructions that might not make sense. It's a great site to find Excel videos featuring everything from quick answers for completing a specific task to full tutorials on all the key elements of the program. Photo Courtesy: YouTube The only downside is that absolutely anyone can make and post YouTube videos, which means some creators will be far from experts. Be sure to look for videos with lots of views and likes and skim the comments at the bottom. You also want to make sure site's a recent video with instructions for your version of Excel. The general look and quality of the video may provide a clue to the overall quality as well, although some very talented software gurus aren't great videographers.Visit GCFLearnFree.orgAnother great source of beginner Excel training, the GCFLearnFree.org site offers easy-to-follow, step-by-step tutorials to help you do everything from enter simple columns of data to complete sheets filled with complex calculations. By the time you finish the free training, you will be able to use the full collection of functions, create charts and more. The tutorial takes you through everything you need to know one step at a time. Finally, you can bookmark pages to quickly access Excel Tips and MS Excel formulas.Photo Courtesy: @Microsoft365/Twitter Don't Forget About Microsoft Office HelpMicrosoft Office has a support website designed to help you figure out how to do specific tasks. It also includes broader Excel training for beginners and provides answers to specific questions. If you're wondering how to create a work planning template or you need to create a monthly expense sheet, Microsoft offers all these answers and more from inside the Excel program. Just click the Help option on the top menu bar or look for the question mark to get answers to common questions.Photo Courtesy: @Microsoft365/Twitter Expand Your Skills with ExcelJetOnce you master the basics of Excel, you can take advantage of ExcelJet to make working in the program even easier. The comprehensive website offers training videos, formulas and keyboard shortcuts that reduce the amount of time it takes to do pretty much everything. In fact, the main page for ExcelJet features more than 200 shortcuts for use in Excel in Windows. A link clearly labeled at the top takes you to Excel shortcuts on the Mac as well.Photo Courtesy: @Microsoft365/Twitter Take Tutoring ClassesYou should never feel like Excel is a program you can't learn. If you start small and simply tackle one new task at a time, the sky is the limit on learning this efficient spreadsheet software with minimal stress. If you still feel like you're struggling after using all these free resources, you can look for Microsoft Excel tutoring classes in your area, but keep in mind that you probably won't find free options. In some areas, public libraries offer free classes for different types of software. Additionally, if you're a student, your college may offer free software tutorials.Photo Courtesy: @Microsoft365/Twitter MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET If you're interested in learning to code in the programming language JavaScript, you might be wondering where to start. There are many learning paths you could choose to take, but we'll explore a few jumping off spots here.What is JavaScript?JavaScript is a web-based, object-oriented programming language, commonly used in conjunction with HTML5 and CSS to create modern interactive websites and effects. Code written in JavaScript runs inside a web browser, and isn't used in stand-alone applications or computer programs. Java — a language that is similar by name but only somewhat related to JavaScript — is used to create code that can be executed outside a web browser. If you're seeking to become a web developer, JavaScript can be a useful tool to learn. Now we'll look at some classes that teach this programming language.JavaScript Introduction by edXFor complete beginners, you might start off by exploring the online "JavaScript Introduction" MOOC class, offered by edX and provided by The World Wide Web Consortium. This class is self-paced with few prerequisites, and introduces students to several concepts; according to the class page, these include:How to add JavaScript (JS) code in your Web site/Web app, how to debug it.How to make interactive Web sites through the DOM API How to change the CSS styles of HTML5 elements from JavaScript How to deal with HTML5 forms How to make basic graphics and animations using the HTML5 canvas How to use the basic concepts of ES2016, the last iteration of the language: arrays, functions, loops, basic objects Programming for the Web with JavaScript by edXAnother offering from edX is the online class "Programming for the Web with JavaScript," and provided by the University of Pennsylvania. Another self-paced class that should take about four weeks to complete, the class webpage indicates that students will learn:The basics of how the World Wide Web allows browsers to send and retrieve web content Web browser internals, the Document Object Model (DOM), and Query How to create dynamic, interactive web pages using JavaScript Techniques for creating data-driven websites using modern web technologies Client-side JavaScript libraries and frameworks Server-side JavaScript application architecture, middleware, HTTP, and RESTful API design Programming Foundations With JavaScript, HTML and CSS by CourseraCoursera.org provides several JavaScript training options, including the "Programming Foundations with JavaScript, HTML and CSS," offered by Duke University. This course teaches some overall programming basics along with web-development concepts, including:Designing a Web Page with HTML and CSS Algorithms and Programming Concepts JavaScript for Web Pages Intro to JavaScript by UdacityThe "Intro to JavaScript" from Udacity page tells students: "Learn the fundamentals of JavaScript, the most popular programming language in web development." The two-week, free course aimed at beginners teaches:What is JavaScript?
